Are you someone who typically never thought about temporary work as a viable career option? You may want to reconsider. A recent article by the WSJ highlights the attractiveness of temporary work and how it is very viable career option.

The article states:

"Staffing firms say employers are turning to temporary help in lieu of regular hires until they can be certain that a more permanent investment will pay off. Demand is strongest in technology, tax accounting, compliance and customer service."

Anyone currently on a temporary assignment hoping for a staff position in the long-term? Do you have any advice for other MyPath members?
